ADDITIONAL ARCHITECTURAL AND STRUCTURAL DESCRIPTION:
The Federhen house is a 2½ story, central chimney Georgian style structure featuring graduated, feathered clapboard wall covering on the main block. The 6 panelled center entry door is surmounted by transom lights and flanked by pilasters which rise to meet a full entablature. Windows have two over two, and nine over six sash, all with archeditrave trim. The low pitched roof is topped by a massive central chimney, and the cornice treatment consists of close raking eaves, and a boxed cornice on the lateral eaves. A 1 story, shed roofed, open porch to the southeast is supported by square columns. A 2 story gable roofed ell rests on a fieldstone foundation. It has a 6 panelled door surmounted by transom lights, and windows with nine over six sash. A 1 story, shed roofed open porch to the northwest is supported by square columns. A 1 story shed roofed wing rests on a fieldstone foundation. It has a 6 panelled door flanked by fluted pilasters and surmounted by a peaked transom. It has windows with nine over six sash framed by archeditrave trim.

RELATED STRUCTURES AND CONTEXT: A separate 1½ story, gable-roofed barn to the northwest rests on a fieldstone foundation and has wood shingle siding. It has an attached 1 story gable roofed shed to the northeast. A separate 1 story, gable roofed shed to the southwest has a vertical board door, and wood shingle siding.
