ADDITIONAL ARCHITECTURAL AND STRUCTURAL DESCRIPTION:
The Babcook House is a Greek Revival style house built c. 1845.
The center entry has a 4-panel door with sidelights, and pilasters rising to a partial entablature. All windows in the main block are two-over-one and six-over-one. The medium-pitched roof is topped by two chimneys with corbeled caps, and the eaves treatment consists of a boxed cornice with a wide frieze and gable end returns.
A 1-story, shed-roofed porch on the southeast side is supported by a round, tapering column.

An ell rests on a stone and concrete foundation. It has two-over-two windows, a boxed cornice, and a tall chimney.
A 1-story, gable-roofed wing on the west side has clapboard siding, two-over-one windows, and rests on a fieldstone foundation.
A shed-roofed porch on the rear has large new windows and rests on a concrete foundation.

RELATED STRUCTURES AND CONTEXT: New garage.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Evaluation & Historical Associations):
The E. Hunt House makes an interesting contrast with the O. Hunt House (Site 26) as it is also built in the cape style format but probably built some 50 years later, showing the influence of the Greek Revival style.
