

Kingston Museum begins working on Town History for Kingston's 325th Celebration

The Kingston Historical Museum has begun work on a revised and updated History of the Town of Kingston which we hope will be available for Kingston's 325th Celebration in 2019. It is hard to believe that 25 years have passed since the History was last published in 1994. Museum is putting together a working group to be led by Bob Bean. This is a major undertaking and we are looking for members of the broader Kingston community who are interested in contributing to the project. Kingston we need your help!

We hope to capture the vitality of Kingston's religious, business, civic, political, social and environmental organizations that have helped shape our community by working with their designated representative to document each group's contributions. We are also looking for individuals with strong writing skills to join the working group who will work with these community groups to capture their activities over the last 25 years and to help develop new material that is relevant to each organization.

If you enjoy history and would like to help research and document various aspects of Kingston's history there are many topics to explore including the carriage and poultry industries, local government and other political activities, educational institutions, natural resources and individual and family backgrounds.

The Museum will be holding an informational night about the project on Wednesday December 6th at 7pm at the Nichols Memorial Library located at 169 Main Street, Kingston, NH. Please come if you are interested in joining the working group or if your organization would like to be included the 325th History. If you are unable to attend this initial meeting please contact the Museum at museuminfo@kingstonnh.org so that we can keep you updated or you can contact Bob Bean at 289-5027 if you have any questions.
